DAILY PRESS." SIR,-I think exception might be taken to every one of "An Old Resident's" statements Allow me to take them coriatim. 1.—That we have settled the Chinese interest The Chinese are a generous race of people and many schemes might be brought forward, par-

2.-That Americans, Germans, and other for eigners would not subscribe if the money were to be spent out of the colony. If we were to carry out the Qucon's plainly expressed wish and subscribe to the Jubilee Institute Germans and others would, I am convinced, come forword as readily as British subjects, because they would recognize that the colony, and consequently their trade interests, would benefit more than by any of the other proposals. 3.—That the library would be impracticable

I think it is as practicable as anything that has been brought forward, and far more so than the Peak Sanitarium. Had it been brought before the meeting by one of our leading residents it would, I believe, have stood the best chance, barring of course the preposterous proposal to build on the Cricket Ground. I see no reason The Chamber of Deputies has commenced the why the City Hall could not be utilised for such

4.—The female education scheme need by no means "be a sort of moral farmyard in which the clerical party would vote the most." The correspondent who first advocated it in your columns stated distinctly that he is not a Christian. As for "the outside public caring little or nothing," I think that the parents of every deal. They are getting more numerous every day, and something in that direction must certainly be done very soon. Here is an opportunity to get such an institution not under the control of the clerical party, Whom does "An Old Resident" consider "the outside public"? He must have been thinking of twenty years ago.

5 .- Dr. Manson's Sanitarium, which your correspondent advocates, is, I think, the most imam much inclined to say the same of the Sanitarium. If it should be it will in no respect be looked on as a memorial to the Queen. The "Austin Arms" was built, if I am not greatly mistaken, and I P was here at the time, as a Sanitarium for the general public to be practically at the disposul of the physicians. It was almost from the first monopolized by officials, and afterwards usurped by a clique amongst them. Something of the same kind will assuredly happen should another sanitarium be built by public subscription. If the Tramway hotel does not supply the public want a boarding house will soon be established as a private speculation.

To my mind the only sensible remark in "A Old Resident's" letter, is that in which he expresses the fear that the new institution to be established by the Chinese will later on attempt to dictate to Europeans. That is a matter to be seriously considered, but it does not bear on the question now before us .- Yours truly, CONFUSION WORSE CONFOUNDED

In an article on Japanese tools the Japan Mail

Let it be granted that the useful part of a

outting instrument is its edge. 'In this respect

Japanese tools are inferior to none. The blades are thicker than those of English make-as thick, probably, as ours were before we took to making them entirely of cast steel. The Japanese saw is, to our notion, set reversely. This is necessary because the carpenter crouches to his work. If he should attempt to use an English-set saw. floor. And it must be allowed that the Japanese way of using a hand-saw has its adventages. It admits the employment of a lighter blade than ours. All machine-saws work upon this principle—the blade being in tension whilst giving the cut. The Japanese plane has a single iron, and is therefore not so well adapted to take a deep cut as is the English tool; but of course it takes a light out just as well. The carpenter planes towards himself for the same reason as he saws toward himself-because, long accustomed to be on a level with his work, and unable therefore to lay his weight upon the tool, there is only one alternative open to him-to pull the tool down on to the work. The kiri, in expert hands, is superior to the bradawl or gimlet. It does not split wood. An English "brace" and set of "bits" would certainly form a useful addition te every Japanese carpenter's tool-chest that is without thom, and English cast-steel gonges would prove handier than his own, because they are thinner and lighter. The other tools that complete the carpenter's equipment differ in no essential from their English counterparts; the latter are, however, lighter in the blade and, being steel throughout, are parfectly stiff. But if any proof be required that the tools now in use in Japan can produce good work, the evidence of the engineers' pattern-shops is sufficient. There is no more conoial test of good carpentry than pattern making, and the work that is done in this country is excellent.

It is difficult to leave the subject without referring to the other half of it. Who is to supply tools to this large industry in fature. and of what shape are they to be? Japan's present implements are not at all likely to go out of fashion in our time. It is to be remembered that the Japanese has accustomed himself to work in certain positions. Is he to reform his attitude before we extend to him the privilege of using Sheffield steel? Or are we to give him steel in the shapes to which he is accustomed Assuradly the latter. A Japanese does not disdain to provide foreigners with fine tea. although he knows full well that many will stew it in metal pots, and will drink the darksome brew out of porcelain flagons, with handles on the sides of them, God wat! Why then should we not make for him tools that he can work without concerning ourselves whether or not his methods accord with Western usage?

It is not meant to suggest that the Japanese arpenter should be content with this homemade tools. On the contrary, it is pretty certain that he would find English-made tools more satisfactory. But the present cutting edges cannot be altered with any advantage to his werk, nor can the forms be altered with any advantage to himself. . . . When better organisation of labour in Japan shall make profitable the extensive introduction of wood-working machinery, then the tools of the present day may come to be called uncouth and trifling; trifling, as a Vulcan's might be beside a hydraulic rivetter, and uncouth. as a Newcomen engine might be beside an express locomotive. But plenty of chisels and saw will be worn out before that day comes, and many an idle hour be counted in Sheffield work-SHIRKING THE DEFENCE OF THE EMPIRE. Since Lord Randolph Churchill resigned on the question of coaling stations we have waited with some degree of anxiety to see whother the Government would grapple with the defence of the Empire in a truly Imperial spirit. Of this

This is too preposterous. Lord Salisbury and Mr. Gosehen ought to know better than to call in the aid of irresponsible advisors in this way. If a Cabinet cannot make up its mind that it is necessary for our commercial ports and coaling stations to be protected against the attack of a hostile squadron, then the Cabinet is not up to its work, and the sconer it makes way for a more courageous Administration the better. At this rate we shall soon be having the Cabinet summoning secret committees to decide whether, having bought gunpowder for guns, it is worth while to provide them with shot. That is not one whit more ridiculous than the question which has to be submitted to the secret council which the Government has devised as a remedy for its own moral cowardice. It is now more than two years since the unprotected state of our coaling stations and commercial ports, which had long been a source of anxiety to those upon whom lay the responsibility for the defence of the Empire, was forced upon the attention of the nation at large. Mr. Giadstone's Government, after a prolonged disoussion with the heads of the Departments arrived at a scheme for the defence of the Empire which, although it constituted a very considerable advance upon anything that had been previously contemplated, fell far short of the real requirements of our position. For this, as all the world knows, we have chiefly to thank Mr. Chamberthe real state of our coaling stations or the defences of our commercial ports-or, indeed, or anything whatever relating to the army and navy-succeeded by mere obstinacy in cutting His Holiness the Pope will to-day preconise down the proposals, to which his colleagues had (or formally proclaim) the Most Rev. POST-OFFICE NOTICES.

When Correspondence has been mis-sent or delayed (both of which are liable to happen occasionally) all that the addressee need do is to note on the cover, Sent to, or Received at 7 p.m., or as the case may be, and forward it, without any other writing whatever, to the Postmaster-General. This should be acted on the first time cause of complaint occurs; it is a mistake to let such matters pass for fear of giving trouble, a course which generally gives more trouble in the end.
